

It's your body. Now it's your choice about how you want to be treated.

You won't be surprised that I am totally behind a campaign to raise funds for breast cancer research.

No man, woman or child would look forward to the idea of having chemotherapy, radiotherapy or surgery. The medics behind this campaign believe that they can make mastectomy a thing of the past for half of all breast cancer cases.

The treatment's called PDT - Photodynamic Therapy. It's used now for skin cancer, mouth and early lung cancer, prostate and even vulval and penile cancer. It's also approved for Barrett's oesophagus.

PDT is designed as a one-off treatment that uses a light-sensitive drug that, when activated in the cancer with light, kills tumours quickly by stopping the oxygen supply to the cancer cells. It really is that simple.

And there are none of the dreadful side effects such as prolonged nausea, white blood cell damage and hair loss. It's a gentle way to kill cancer. There are also trials planned for pancreatic, throat, bone, bladder, cervical, vulval, lung, brain and many other cancers. PDT could even offer an alternative to hysterectomy.

We'll be funding this work in London at the Royal Free Hospital and in Boston, Massachusetts, USA, and delivering this new, fully approved treatment, to the world. It's about you and me and millions of other women ... doing it for us.

Making it happen is easy. Just email this file to all your friends around the world. Within weeks, millions of women will be part of this life-changing campaign. For you. For me. For our children.

Donate as little or as much as you like. Just £10 or $20 from half a million women will see us reach our target.

The more money we raise, the more cancers and medical conditions we can get PDT approved to treat.
