

A time for football to be United

There are times when we should all put aside old sporting rivalries. How can players, managers and fans alike not be touched by the cancer battles of our friends? John Hartson, Sir Bobby Robson, Gary McAllister's wife and, some years ago, Jim Baxter.

Cancer isn't something you can beat with an off-side trap or with clever tactics. Cancer isn't a game. It's life and death.

For years, our cancer choices have been surgery, radiotherapy and chemotherapy. If cancer came your way, which one would you want? I know the answer. None of them.

When I heard about Photodynamic Therapy (PDT), I was truly amazed. The whole concept is so simple, and is already helping many cancer patients to avoid the suffering, the mental and physical treatment scars. And many live against the odds.

If you have a look at the KILLING Cancer charity website, you'll see some amazing video clips and stories from patients treated. People with lung cancer, prostate cancer, mouth cancer and now bile duct and pancreatic cancer.

PDT is usually a one-off treatment than doesn't involve the knife and patients don't suffer sickness and hair loss. If anything about cancer treatment is 'easy', then PDT is. It would be my choice. After one drug dose, light is used to activate it. The cancer tumour is destroyed naturally by starving the target cells of oxygen. It is that simple.

In Scotland we have the highest cancer death rate in the UK. There are research teams here in Glasgow, Falkirk, Edinburgh, Dundee, and in Manchester, Leeds, London and some other UK hospitals that need our support now.

They want to bring us established, proven PDT cancer cures for lung cancer, pancreatic, bile duct, prostate, breast, cervical, stomach, bone and brain cancers. And many more besides.

I hope you'll donate - maybe just a tenner. I know millions of football fans will share my wish to make cancer suffering a thing of the past. Just click on the KILLING Cancer logo below and you can donate now.

Please send this PDF to all your friends around the world. Even fans of other clubs! Let's all pull together and kill cancer.

Best wishes and thanks.

Walter
